"I told him. If you want little boys to play Game Boy, pack in Mario - but if you want everyone to play it, pack in Tetris."

All's well that ends well

- ★ In 1996 Tetris Founder Pajitnov and Rogers founded the Tetris Company to handle licensing for Tetris and its spinoffs.

- ★ Bought Elorg, that had transformed into a private company from the fall of the Soviet Union - gaining total control of all Tetris rights worldwide.

Some Curiosities about Tetris

Its theme song is more than 100 years old

Tetris theme song is a classic remake of “Korobeiniki”, a 10th century Russian song.

Has its own syndrome named after it

Some players have said that playing Tetris for extended periods of time would make them see Tetris-like shapes around them.

But it's good for your health

A 1992 study found that playing the game helped the brain operate more efficiently.

IT'S A BATTLE OF WITS IN THIS SOVIET MIND GAME!

From the land that has produced the greatest chess minds comes a very different mind game. Developed by two Soviet programmers, TETRIS is the first computer game to breach the Iron Curtain. It now stands before you, not as a test of crude brawn, but as an intense battle of wits.

TETRIS is a dynamic puzzle that seems easy enough: Rotate and flip moving geometric blocks into unbroken rows. When you completely fill up the bottom row, it disappears from the screen and your score rises. When enough rows vanish, the blocks descend faster and faster.

Nothing to it, right? Wrong! When you can't find the way to make the pieces fit together and more blocks tumble down to clog your screen, you'll wish you had ten hands — and ten brains.

Warning: Although TETRIS may be great food for thought, it's so much fun, it's positively addictive. So don't forget to eat something to fuel your body (maybe apple pie).

TETRIS and apple pie. Now that's delicious!
